From Imperial Fleet Commander Khrr'orca't

Update

Subject -- The Border Wars

There have been alarming reports coming from the commanders of Border Posts 2 through to 6. They say the attacks are getting more vicious and seem to be coordinated. At last report there were approximately 53 small and medium size warcraft, accompanied by at least 190 fighter-class ships grouping just outside the Outer Rim region controlled by the Empire. On the bright side, all the warcraft seem to be old-style ships, with some pre-dating even the Imperial Construction Period. Supreme Warrior Commander Na'kron't suggests we bring a fleet out there and reinforce the ships that are already there. Unfortunately, most of the ships are antiquated due to the systems remoteness. At the end of the report is a listing of the ships we might use if we go with Supreme Warrior Commander Na'kron'ts suggestion. As well as all this there have been sightings of an unknown species. They seem to be co-operating with the rebels, though we can't be sure. This is the best description we have: they are bipedal and most seem to be around the 2 meter mark in height. They have green skin which is divided into bands which encircle their bodies. The head is elongated, ending in a small muzzle. If the teeth are anything to go by, it is definitely a predator, although the rebels seem to get along with them. The muzzle is about 13 cm long. It is tipped by a small, curving spike. The spike has a very sharp jagged inside edge. The hands have 6 long fingers, each ending in a sharp talon. Their chests and legs are covered by thick armour. No sensors we have yet tried have been able to penetrate it. I ask you to get your best technicians working on a device that can penetrate it. We haven't been able to get any more information than this.
